Man's unhappiness comes, in part, from his greatness. There is an infinite in him, which, with all his cunning, he cannot quite bury under the finite.—Carlyle.

MUTSUHITO

Many nations and many peoples may well mourn the death of Japan's great emperor, Mutsuhito.

What place history will give him as a statesman it is far too early to say with certainty, but with certainty it may be said that his place will be high. He has seen a nation grow in civilization as no other nation ever grew, and his influence has been on the progressive side. His statesmanship was constructive and definite. The admiration, the respect, the love of his people was a unifying force of remarkable strength. A famous historian has said that the deepest and strongest force in Japanese history has been the universal loyalty of the people to their Mikado, and this loyalty carried them forward as he moved forward on the paths of modern thought and action.

OAHU COLLEGE'S FINE RECORD

In another column of the Star-Bulletin today is published a summary of the treasurer's report on Oahu College's financial year. It is a fine record the college has made, and one in which not only the alumni, former students and officers of the institution but all Hawaii may take pride.

The record of Oahu college is more than a successful financial one. Its expenses are very largely increased by the attendance of students from islands other than Oahu, but the trustees wisely determined that no student should be turned from its doors—a decision that is adhered to even at a strain of resources.

Hawaii owes a lasting debt to the educational facilities afforded by Oahu college, and the canvas of the alumni for a new gymnasium should be given a hearty response. Furthermore, there are improvements needed that demand attention if the college's work is to go on unimpeded, and the trustees should be met more than half-way.

A JAPANESE VIEW

An illuminating article on Japanese immigration, with direct reference to the Dillingham bill with which Hawaii has become quite familiar in the past year, is contained in the July number of the Oriental Review, a Japanese publication of New York. The article is by K. K. Kawakami, an American-educated Japanese of much repute as a writer.

He comments on the bill as follows:

"The firm opposition of Americans of European birth or parentage has resulted in the tabling of Senator Dillingham's immigration bill by the immigration committee of the house. From a Japanese point of view the arguments advanced against the bill are certainly not justifiable. The Japanese, I am sure, would not object to the educational test provided in the Dillingham bill, even if the test were to be made exclusively in English. Certainly there is no reason why they should disapprove of the measure, when the literary examination is to be made in any language in which the immigrant prefers to be examined. True, the system of 'tagging' immigrants adopted in the bill is cumbersome, but compared with the system of requiring the Japanese, regardless of class or social standing, to be equipped with a passport, the new measure of conferring upon European immigrants certificates of admission is far less objectionable. As for the increase of the poll tax no Japanese will raise a voice against it.

"The Japanese will ungrudgingly accept all such restrictive measures when they are to be applied equally to all races. It is only when they are singled out as objects of discrimination that they protest. Unfortunately the Dillingham bill in its original form had such a discriminative clause. That the discriminative clause was directed chiefly at the Japanese cannot be denied, because immediately preceding that clause there was another clause specifically providing for the exclusion of the Chinese. The revised bill is less objectionable in so far as it provides that the Japanese exclusion clause shall not be applied as long as the 'gentlemen's agreement' remains in force. This means that the 'gentlemen's agreement,' itself an exclusion measure, must be made a permanent agreement, for the moment it terminates, Japan will have to accept a far more rigid exclusion measure. The Dillingham bill, though dead for the present session, will surely be brought forward in the next session of Congress. The present is not an opportune moment for the enactment of such a law, for the politicians, whose eyes are fixed upon the ballots which will be cast in November, cannot ignore the opposition of the European immigrants who have become American citizens. So the knell of the Dillingham bill is not yet tolled."

THE ARCHBALD CASE

Lacking the sensational bitterness and much of the dramatic character of the Lorimer case, the impeachment of Judge Robert W. Archbald of the commerce court affords nevertheless a vivid picture for Americans to pause and consider.

Only eight times within the last century and a quarter have impeachment proceedings been brought before the United States senate. Only twice have those impeached been convicted. A president of the United States has been on trial, and a justice of the supreme court, a senator, a secretary of war.

Just what an impeachment is may be briefly explained. The senate is sworn in as a court of impeachment and a summons issued for the accused. The house of representatives, through its managers for the occasion, appears as the prosecution, and the accused is called to the bar of the senate and given opportunity to answer to the charges.

Judge Archbald is represented by counsel, and legal advice is also afforded the house managers.

The Lorimer case was marked by violent debate, by wild exhortation and finally by the melodramatic appeal of Senator Lorimer himself a moment before, his head bowed in shame upon his breast, he walked from the room, a tainted, condemned man.

The impeachment proceedings against Judge Archbald will be shorn of much of this melodrama. They will be attended with utmost solemnity and dignity, and if there is an emotional outbreak it will probably come from the overtaxed nerves of Archbald himself.

Any political year would be sufficiently marked by one such case as that of Lorimer or Archbald, and two within a few months is exceptional. Both men are accused of corruption; the one of giving bribes, the other of accepting them.

While every American must feel a sense of shame that charges should even be preferred against such eminent public officials, the charges must be sifted and if found true the officials must be driven from public life. The American people are in no mood for corrupt dignitaries, no matter what their position or what their shameful backing.

Senator Lodge not only hit the nail on the head but drove it in when he charged the sugar trust with complicity in the attempt to force free-sugar legislation through Congress.

Link McCandless refuses to get involved in the Jarrett row. As a matter of fact, he is involved in it.

Perhaps the promotion committee can persuade Kilauea to time her pyrotechnics for the 1913 Floral Parade.

British politics bobbing up again. They've been quiet since the House of Lords got that trimming.

Maybe Taft won't get a chance to sign any sugar bill.

Few baseball umpires will agree with Dr. Eliot.

H. Gooding Field is right in his element at Hilo.

The way of the steam-roller is hard.

PERSONALITIES

CHIEF McDUFFEE will return to Oahu on the sixth of next month. McDuffee has been visiting his parents on the Coast.

C. H. BROWN will represent the local order of Moose at the Kansas City convention.

N. M. LORD, a clerk of the Hawaiian Dredging Company at Watertown, is a guest at the Hawaiian Hotel for a few days.

R. T. CHRISTOFFERSEN and Mrs. Christoffersen are registered at the Hawaiian Hotel.

JOHN R. MOTT, international secretary of the Y. M. C. A., will visit Honolulu again next May, according to a letter received from General Secretary Super of Honolulu by Ed Towse. The international convention will be held in Los Angeles next summer.

CHANGES MADE IN TENNIS DATES

A change in arrangements for the men's doubles of the championship tennis tournament was decided on this morning by the committee. Instead of playing off the event this week it will be postponed until next week, starting probably Wednesday, August 7. This change is thought advisable owing to the fact that several of the best players are to be absent from the city this coming week, and would have to be left out of the drawings. Also, W. P. Roth, former Hawaiian champion, will be back this week, and it is thought that he will enter, thereby increasing interest in the event.

The ladies singles and doubles and mixed doubles will be played off this week, commencing Wednesday. The finals in the men's singles are scheduled for 4 o'clock this afternoon at Beretania, and there will be no tennis tomorrow.

MIKADO WILL NOT

meated with the "Mikado," that when the pruners had finished their work there were just enough words and music left to supply a part for one lone person. In view of this, he decided to cut out the Mikado entirely and give a vaudeville performance instead.

"You can't monkey with the works of celebrated framers of operas like Gilbert and Sullivan and get away with it," said Kipling, "for that reason we will have a real live vaudeville show and the audience will be informed of the reason for change."

CROSSED LEGS; FINED $10

BROOKLYN, July 10.—"No gentleman should sit in a public car with his legs crossed," declared Magistrate Nauman in the Gates Avenue Court, Brooklyn, yesterday, as he fined Richard Jaeger $10. Mrs. Anna Bromberg, of No. 22 East One Hundred and Seventh street, Manhattan, was the complainant.

Jaeger, who is forty-eight years old and resides at No. 81 Jefferson street, is a photographer. According to Mrs. Bromberg, she was a passenger on an elevated train when Jaeger got on and took a seat alongside of her. He crossed his legs immediately and his shoes rubbed against her dress.

Mrs. Bromberg protested, but Jaeger continued to keep his legs crossed and when he got off the train at Myrtle avenue and Broadway, she called a policeman and had him arrested.

IRISH INDIGNANT AT LLOYD GEORGE

DUBLIN, June 10.—The "Irish Independent" gives expression to the surprise and perplexity of the Nationalists at Lloyd George's silence in the home rule debates.

It says: "Irishmen not unnaturally expected that Mr. Lloyd George would be the most active and zealous champion of their cause during the debates in the House of Commons. It was supposed that he would be one of the principal speakers on the government side on the second reading, but for some reason or other he has elected to remain stolidly silent. If any member of the government is under an obligation to the Irish members that member is the chancellor of the exchequer. They helped him to carry two measures, the budget and the insurance act, by which he increased Ireland's burden. He made several speeches in England during the parliamentary recess, but during the parliamentary recess, but David Greenburg of Columbia University to make a systematic search of the old cellars on the island. Professor Greenberg has been on the island for some time when his reign should have attained its golden birthday. Five years more would have been the time. It is to be regretted that Heaven did not prolong so useful a life until that time. However, his reign will stand out as one of the greatest in all history for the beneficent accomplishment of all those instrumentalities that go to make up a great, a contented and a happy people."

LITTLE INTERVIEWS

WILLIAM HENRY, high sheriff—Mr. McCrosson is doing a great deal for Hawaii with his irrigation enterprises.

WALTER G. SMITH—Yes, I can recommend Hawaii in the States for small farming, after what I have seen at the foot of Haleakala among the homesteads.

WM. BUSH—The Kapahulu road is one of the main automobile drives of Honolulu. At the present time it may be widened twenty feet from the boundary of Kapiolani Park to the Waiialea road without disturbing a single house along the way. It should be done now.

HENRY O'SULLIVAN—I saw E. A. Mott-Smith in the mountains of Hawaii the other day with his three boys. I hardly recognized him through the disguise of heavily tanned skin and real hunting clothes. He and his boys are a wild, fearsome looking gang. He says he likes the life so well he won't be back for three or four weeks more.

LAND COMMISSIONER TULLAH—Am having a Punchbowl eruption all my own today. All disgruntled Punchbowl preference right holders are called in to air their grievances, and with the noise and the heat, it sure is just what Sherman said war was.

LETTERS ON TIMELY TOPICS

THE FACTS OF AN UNFORTUNATE CASE

Editor Honolulu Star-Bulletin, Sir:—There appeared in the columns of your paper of last Saturday, under a large headline, an article concerning me.

Anyone who read same would naturally believe I had committed a brutal assault on Mrs. VanGieson, and, in justice to myself, I cannot let it go by unanswered.

On the day of the alleged assault, July 9th, I went to Mrs. VanGieson's house to see how my 11-months-old sick child was and found him unattended while the mother was, all day, at the neighbors drinking gin, as she stated on the witness-stand. After a while Mrs. VanGieson arrived with her breath strong with liquor and started to abuse me. Knowing my child could not be properly cared for in such a home, I took him with me, she consenting to it.

Then I left the place with the child in my arms, and not until I was at a distance from her yard when she changed her mind, chased us up the road and commenced to attack me like a wild beast. All I did was to push her away, not with my clenched fist, but with my open hand, and in so doing she fell repeatedly on the ground and no sooner she struck the ground than she was on her feet again, only ceased attacking me when she finally fell, and owing to the effect of what was in her and through exhaustion, did not rise to her feet, which gave me sufficient time to get away with the child. She was not assisted to her home by anyone, as your paper intimated. I took the child directly to the Children's Hospital, where he is now still in confinement.

The record of the court will bear me out in my statement and why Judge Monarrat fined me so heavily, in spite of the evidence, is beyond explanation. All I did was what anyone would do if attacked by a drunken person, as in this case.

I have found that I cannot live with Mrs. VanGieson any longer, owing to her repeatedly indulging in intoxicating liquor and neglecting my home. I instituted court proceedings against her for habitual intemperance.

I thank you for the space allowed me.

Very respectfully yours,
HENRY VANGIESON.

HUNDRED-YEAR-OLD HAMS $1 A POUND

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 18.—The recent discovery of choice 100-year-old ham in an underground passage near the old brick mansion on Providence Island, has caused Professor David Greenburg of Columbia University to make a systematic search of the old cellars on the island. Professor Greenberg has been on the island for some time.
